How a card works

Cards carry CATEGORIES, not songs. When a performance matches a category on your card, mark the square. The center square is your free space: put your logo sticker there, or leave it as the house mark. Every card also carries social squares (meet someone, post a photo) that get a quiet room talking to each other. Two squares on every card are THE HUNT: one specific famous song per round. Half the room hunts Song A, half hunts Song B, and nobody knows why those songs matter, which makes the whole room root for strangers' performances.

Running the night (about 2 hours)

1. Opener debate (5 minutes): ask the room one either/or question from the edition's world and let them argue happily while they settle in.
2. Name That Tune bowl (10 minutes): guests draw lyric slips from a bowl and read one line aloud in a flat voice; the room guesses song and artist. Print slips on plain paper, cut apart, fold once. Print the answer tiny and upside down at the bottom of each slip so the reader can confirm without showing it.
3. Round 1 (10-14 performances): singers pick songs in the edition's spirit; the room marks cards and cheers for the hunt songs.
4. Mic moment: thank your people, announce your next event, celebrate whoever is celebrating.
5. Round 2: same flow, faster energy.

6. Closer: one song the whole room sings together (a birthday song if someone is celebrating; the hunt song nobody got makes a great encore), then goodnight. Prizes: small and frequent beats big and rare. A free drink, a dessert, a shout-out, next event free entry.

Printing

Open the edition's PDF and print: Letter size, Actual size (100%), two-sided, flip on long edge. Cards are black and white on purpose: cheap to print, kind to home printers, and they look sharp on colored card stock if you want a house color. Laminate the set and use dry-erase markers and the same 40 cards serve you all season. Print pages 1-2 first and hold them to the light to check the two sides line up before the full run.

Make your own Name That Tune slips

Pick 12-18 songs your room truly knows. From each, take ONE lyric line everyone recognizes once they hear it, never the title line. Order them easy to deep cut. Open your night with the two hunt songs' lines: it quietly teaches the room the songs they are hunting before the first card comes out.

License

One purchase covers one host or organization, unlimited events, unlimited reprints for your own rooms. Please do not resell, share, or post the files themselves. Your guests may keep their cards, obviously.
